Make a List of The Main Points

Consider the essential topics and write them down in your own words in this phase. Consider the key points you'll need to include in the summary. Take a look at the piece if you need to reread it, and then start writing the essential ideas for the summary.

Begin the summary by stating the title of the piece and the author's name. It will be clear to the reader that you are summarizing the work of another author.

Make the First Draft

Without looking at your notes, write the first draught. Each section's primary point is included. Never, ever-present the overview from the author's perspective as well.

Use Proper Terminology

In conclusion, suitable terminology should be used. When presenting their argument, utilize suitable terms like "the author argues." Remind the reader that this is not your writing; you are simply summarising another author's work.

Read The First Draft Again

Reread the first draft without your notes and then compare it to your notes when you've finished it. Then, if you missed anything, you may easily add it to your second draft. It is the most effective strategy, and every essay writer uses it in their work.

Present Summary in Chronological Order

In chronological order, the following is a summary of the current situation. When writing the summary, make sure to include all of the relevant details in chronological order and explain what occurred. It's especially crucial when summarising a piece of fiction.

Repetition is Removed

When rereading your summary, look for any phrases or sentences that are repeated. It will perplex the reader, resulting in a poor summary.

Transitions Should be Included

If necessary, you can also use transition words within or between paragraphs. The transition words keep sentences flowing and connect each paragraph to the next.

Editing and Proofreading

You will verify your grammatical and spelling errors in this phase. Look for places where you need to add punctuation or modify your grammar.
